

Foreign Direct Investment and Economic Development Policy in Macau

Report
East Asia

Has the Asian Economic Miracle bypassed Macau? Some observers came to this conclusion by the mid-1990s. After its rapid industrialization and equally rapid growth in prosperity in the 1970s and early 1980s, it gradually became clear that Macau was not going to follow the development model of Japan, Taiwan, South Korea, Hong Kong, and Singapore. These had all benefited from foreign technology during their economic take-off. The main carrier of foreign technology is foreign direct investment (FDI), but in Macau's case FDI did not have a lasting effect on industrial or economic development.

By Frans-Paul van der Putten

From the early 1970s, FDI from Hong Kong provided the main stimulus for the growth of Macau's light industry, which was export oriented and labour intensive. However, this was not followed by a second phase of industrialization in heavy industry or high-tech manufacturing, nor did it stimulate the development of an advanced trade and services sector. From the late 1980s, Macau 'de-industrialized' as factories moved across the border to Zhuhai, the Chinese Special Economic Zone where production costs are lower. By the mid-1990s, FDI and industrial development had largely evaporated, and apart from its gambling industry the Macau economy did not have much on which to base further growth. Economists have long been urging the Macau government to broaden its economic base by developing new sectors. This process may gain considerable support from foreign capital and technology, brought into Macau by foreign companies. But so far, the more traditional industry of gambling remains all-important and little FDI is entering Macau.

It is generally known that, as massive foreign investment has been pouring into neighbouring Hong Kong and Guangdong, Macau has not managed to attract significant FDI. It has also frequently been pointed out that Macau has little to offer to foreign investors: it constitutes a very small market with only some 400,000 inhabitants and lacks natural resources, production costs are higher than in Zhuhai, and its services sector is small and underdeveloped in comparison to Hong Kong's. Still, being located in the economically dynamic Pearl River delta and being administratively and historically separated from surrounding territories, would it not be possible for Macau to attract more than just tourists for its casinos?

This research focuses on Macau's ability to attract effective FDI: foreign investments with a stimulating effect on economic development and diversification. An important question to be answered in this context is what Macau's colonial past – a Portuguese governor administered Macau until late 1999 – implies for its economic future. How did Portuguese rule affect the size and nature of inward FDI and economic development in Macau and what changes may be expected from its recent transition to a China-controlled Special Administrative Region? In order to address these questions, a one-month research visit was made to Portugal. Although no data younger than thirty years is accessible in Portuguese government archives, Lisbon does have a number of institutes specialized in collecting published data on Macau's history and its current economic and political status.

The data collected in Lisbon indicate that the Portuguese colonial system has had a negative effect on Macau's ability to attract and use FDI for economic development. During the final decades of the colonial era, three main parties had direct or indirect access to political power in Macau: the Portuguese government, the Macau Chinese, and the Chinese government. However, because no single group was strong enough to dominate the political scene, a system of compromises came into being, in which long-term economic aims had to be surrendered to short-term ones. Consequently a policy to attract and utilize types of FDI that generate structural economic development did not materialize prior to the withdrawal of Portuguese colonial influence in 1999. The interests of the new administration of Macau and of the PRC government are sufficiently compatible to result in a constructive and coherent policy. Of course, it may take considerable time before the legacy of the pre-1999 era has been left behind. In practice, this means that for the time being Macau and China tend to favour the dominant role of the gambling industry – which brings certain benefits but also a dependency on a single source of economic growth – rather than embark on the more difficult path towards diversification and integration into technology-based economic networks in East Asia. Consequently, it is unlikely that incoming FDI will contribute in a structural way to sectors other than gambling or tourism in the near future.

Studies on contemporary Macau do not have a high profile in the field of Asian Studies and take up only a very minor place in China-related research. But as a result of its colonial past, Portugal has the capacity to continue to play a central role in European Macau Studies, and can thus ensure that researchers working on Macau have a place where they can meet each other and find most relevant publications and pre-1999 documents in a single place. <

Dr Frans-Paul van der Putten is a researcher at Nyenrode University (the Netherlands), where he works on various topics related to corporate social behaviour. He has a particular interest in multinational enterprises in developing economies and foreign investment in China. f.vdputten@nyenrode.nl

Internet >

- www.cccm.pt/sid (Macau Scientific and Cultural Centre)
- www.foriente.pt (Fundação Oriente)
- www.ics.ul.pt (Institute for Social Studies, Lisbon University)
- www.ipim.gov.mo (Macau Trade and Investment Promotion Institute)

[ advertisement ]

Anthem South Asian Studies

New and forthcoming books...

Series Editor, Crispin Bates, PhD, Senior Lecturer in History, Centre for South Asian Studies, University of Edinburgh, UK

Anthem South Asian Studies provides comprehensive coverage of all aspects of the region, past and present. Guided by a team of leading academics and thinkers from around the world, the series focuses on key issues in fields ranging from economics and politics to history and the arts, and will appeal to academics, students and general readers alike.

- Editorial Board: Subho Basu, SOAS, University of London, UK.
Urvashi Butalia, University of Delhi, India; Director, Kali for Women.
Suranjan Das, University of Calcutta, India.
Christophe Jaffrelot, CNRS and CERI, Paris, France.
Javed Majeed, Queen Mary College, University of London, UK.
Subrata Mitra, University of Heidelberg, Germany.
Janaki Nair, Institute for Social and Economic Change, Bangalore, India.
Gyanendra Pandey, Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, USA.
Romila Thapar, Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi, India.
Nira Wickremasinghe, University of Colombo, Sri Lanka.

A HISTORY OF MODERN INDIA 1480-1950

Edited by Claude Markovits

A superb survey of the economic, political and social history of India. Detailed coverage is given to the rise of nationalism and the tragic consequences of partition in 1947.

October 2002, 576 pages
 Hardback: ISBN 1 84331 004 X £24.95

SAKUNTALA

Texts, Readings, Histories

Romila Thapar

Explores the links between culture, history and gender and between literature and history, through reading versions of the narrative of Sakuntala.

June 2002, 282 pages
 Paperback ISBN: 1 84331 026 0 £18.95

A HISTORY OF PAKISTAN AND ITS ORIGINS

Edited by Christophe Jaffrelot

A comprehensive detailed study of one of the most diverse, volatile and strategically significant countries in the world today.

Includes an up-to-date and in-depth analysis of Pakistan's critical relations with Afghanistan in the wake of 9/11.

October 2002, 352 pages.
 Hardback: ISBN 1 84331 030 9 £24.95

COOLITUDE

An Anthology of the Indian Labour Diaspora

Edited by Marina Carter & Khal Torabully

An intellectual interpretation of, and a poetic and artistic immersion into the world of the vanished coolie. This collection of previously unpublished texts, poems and sketches captures the essence of the Indian plantation experience and deconstructs traditional depictions of the status of the coolie in the British Empire.

August 2002 248 pages.
 Hardback ISBN: 1 84331 003 1 £45.00.
 Paperback ISBN: 1 84331 006 6 £21.95

READING SUBALTERN STUDIES

Critical History, Contested Meaning and the Globalization of South Asia South Asian Muslims in New York

David Ludden

This volume of critiques and readings of the Subaltern Studies project represents the first comprehensive historical introduction to the subject and the worldwide debates it has generated among scholars of history, politics and sociology.

July 2002, 452 pages 234x156mm.
 Hardback: ISBN 1 84331 058 9 £39.95.
 Paperback: ISBN 1 84331 059 7 £18.95

SALAAM AMERICA

South Asian Muslims in New York

Aminah Mohammad-Arif

Brought into sharp focus by the events of September 11, 2001 in New York, this study examines the regrouping of the religious community and the reinvention of group identity in first and second-generation immigrants.

August 2002 416 pages.
 Hardback: ISBN 1 84331 009 0 £45.00.
 Paperback: ISBN 1 84331 010 4 £27.95

Anthem Press, 75-76 Blackfriars Road, London SE1 8HA
 Fax: +44 (0) 20 7401 4201 E-mail: sales@wpcpress.com,

Tel: +44 (0) 20 7401 4200
 Web: www.anthempress.com